Bulletin of Bibliography

Vol. 4 OCTOBER, 1905. No. 5

This Bulletin is published, primarily, as a means of communication between The Boston Book Company and its customers. A constant endeavor will be made, however, to include in each issue enough original matter of sufficient value to induce librarians to preserve and bind up the numbers. Each volume will be provided with a title-page and an index.

No subscription price will be put upon the journal, and numbers will not be sold. It will be sent to a selected list of libraries, customers or likely to become customers of The Boston Book Company. The circulation of The Bulletin will be increased in proportion to the interest shown in it, and in the special work of the Library Department of The Boston Book Company. Correspondence is solicited, and should be addressed,

The Boston Book Company,

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Periodicals as Reference Books.

The use of bound volumes of periodicals in the reference work of every library is increasing rapidly. The publication of Poole's Index, the Annual Literary Indexes, the Library Index (both Monthly and Quarterly), and the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature (cumulative) all covering a field nearly the same shows how indispensable the use of our American and English periodicals has become to students.

The Boston Book Company in its Library Department meets this demand for sets, "runs" and volumes of periodicals as no other firm has ever done, with a stock of periodicals larger today than that of all the other dealers in the country combined. A visit to our Francis-street headquarters will convince any librarian that this is true. We collate all volumes sold, which no other dealer does. We understand how libraries like their purchases to be received and fill our orders, and bill our goods in the manner best calculated to give satisfaction and save the library trouble. We ask your patronage either for a portion of a set, or for the entire series of periodicals covered by Poole's Index. We ask a list of all sets you hope to add this coming year, and will quote you as low prices as are possible. Sets are returnable if unsatisfactory on examination.

Let us be your "periodical expert" for 1906. Don't buy a fragment of what you need until you write to us and find out whether the remainder can be had. F. W. Faxon.

Bibliography of Edmond Halley.

We have reprinted the Bibliography of Edmond Halley, first published in our July number, in pamphlet form, 15 p. 12mo., 25 cents. There is but a limited edition and the type is distributed. Do not fail to order at once, or you will be disappointed as so many were when the "Holiday List" went out of print.

Munsey's Magazine will send title and index of vol. 33 to those who request it. It is not in No. 6 as usual. We mourn its omission.

ORIGIN OF THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The General Repository and Review succeeding the Monthly Anthology which had run from 1803-1811, 10 volumes, was edited by Prof. Andrews Norton and continued two years, 4 vols., 1812-13. Mr. Wm. Tudor had been contemplating the establishment of a periodical work for some time but was abroad on business, and supposing he had abandoned his design some gentlemen connected with the University at Cambridge associated themselves together for the same purpose. In December, 1814, and January, 1815, President Kirkland, Professor E. T. Channing, Willard Phillips and others, proposed to start The New England Magazine and Review, Mr. Phillips to be editor. When preparation had been made for announcing the publication, the associates learned that a similar one was proposed by Mr. Tudor, then just returned from his travels and from his position as U.S. Consul at Rio Janeiro. He was held in high estimation for his manners, accomplishments, literary talents and arguments, and was the personal friend of some of the associates, and they concluded to leave the field open to him. The first number of the bi-monthly North American Review and Miscelaneous Journal accordingly came out under Mr. Tudor's editorship, in May, 1815, and was continued one year, when Mr. Tudor put it at the disposal of Mr. Phillips, proposing to continue editor for one year longer without compensation. Mr. Phillips was then junior partner to Hon. Benj. Gorham, a man then and afterwards quite distinguished. The Review when Mr. Phillips assumed the pecuniary responsibility needed the utmost economy, as well as all the activity, talent and learning that could be brought to its aid to bear it up; and to save expense the copies for May, 1816, were mailed from his office to save the booksellers' commission. Messrs. Wells & Lilly, then the leading publishers in Boston, who had published it the preceding year, liberally offered to publish it during the year free of commissions, which helped materially to carry it through that year. When Mr. Tudor retired from the editorship in 1817, an association of contributors was formed, some of the old associates and some new ones, namely: John Gallison, a reporter of decisions, who died young, much respected, beloved and regretted; Nathan Hale, editor of The Daily Advertizer; Richard H. Dana, since well known in the literary world; Edward T. Channing, Mr. Phillips, Wm. Powell Mason, successor to Gallison as reporter of decisions of Story; and Jared Sparks, then a tutor in Harvard, whose name has since become familiar in various ways. Mr. Sparks was editor during that year of the fifth and sixth volumes. These associates met weekly and entered into the matter with great zeal and spirit.

Then in May of 1818 Mr. Channing succeeded Mr. Sparks as editor at the commencement of the seventh volume, and edited the seventh, eighth and ninth volumes, until his appointment in October, 1819, as Boylston Professor. With the eighth volume the Review began to be published quarterly, instead of once in two months as before. Mr. Edward Everett succeeded Mr. Channing as editor. The proprietorship of the Review was in the same association from May, 1818, until it was transferred to Mr. Sparks in 1823, when he resumed the editorship.

Mr. Tudor returned in 1814, and Mr. Phillips and his associates finding that he considered himself as having forestalled them in the matter yielded his claims without controversy. Mr. Tudor edited it two years; then from May, 1817, to March, 1818, it was edited by Mr. Sparks; from May, 1818, to October, 1819, by Edward T. Channing; from January, 1820, to October, 1823, inclusive, by Edward Everett; from January 1824 to April, 1830, inclusive, by Jared Sparks; from July, 1830, to October 1835, by Alex. N Everett; from January, 1836, to January, 1843, by John G. Palfrey; from 1843 to 1853 by Francis Bowen, when Andrew P. Peabody became editor.

The Review in its first 40 years had eight editors. The work was begun in poverty. The editors were obliged to depend on charity and themselves. Some contributed from personal friendship, some from loyalty and good will to the republic of letters, and some doubtless, from ambition to acquire an honorable name and place among honored and conspicuous men, whose good opinion was worth the pains bestowed on their effort. Be that as it may, the work grew gradually in favor. Healthy and substantial has been its growth — with short intervals of flagging perhaps — but for the most part constant.

The contributors received nothing for their work until 1824, when Mr. Sparks on beginning his second term as editor, paid his contributors to the work one dollar per page, and this continued to be the practice for at least thirty years.

NOTE.—Also issued as a separate. This article gives a list of birds observed during a trip to the Bermudas, made from March 10 to May 9, 1901, that appear not to have been previously recorded, viz.: Phæton æthereus, Red-billed Tropic-bird; Larus glaucus, Glaucus Gull; Melanerpes Carolinus, Red-bellied Woodpecker; Passer montanus, European Tree-sparrow (resident); Carduelis carduelis, European Goldfinch; Spinus tristis, American Goldfinch (resident); Spizella monticola, Tree-sparrow; Sitta Carolinensis, White-breasted Nuthatch; Dendroica Pennsylvanica, Chestnut-sided Warbler; D. striata, Black-poll Warbler; D. Blackburniæ, Blackburnian Warbler; Saxicola œnanthe, Wheatear (naturalized); Mimus polyglottus, Mocking Bird (resident).

Identified from the local collection in the Public Library at Hamilton: Orchard Oriole; Thrasher or Brown Thrush; Blue Jay; Red-shouldered Hawk.

"The abundant resident Ground Dove proves to be the Bahama subspecies (Columbigallina passerina Bahamensis). It always has a black bill."

"The resident Bluebird is decidedly larger and brighter colored than the true sialis. It is a new subspecies: Sialia sialis Bermudensis A. H. Verrill."

"The resident cardinal bird of Bermuda also differs as a subspecies from the American forms: Cardinalis cardinalis Somersetii A. H. Verrill."

NOTE.— During February and the fore part of March 1901, there was continued low temperature at Bermuda, at one time reaching 40° F. The sea water was cooled to such an extent as to prove fatal to numerous kinds of fish, which were thrown upon the shores in such numbers as to become offensive by their stench. Among the species observed; besides crabs, corals, etc.; were the hamlet grouper and squirrel fish, parrot-fishes of several kinds, small rock-fishes, hog-fishes, white grunts, large porcupine-fishes, trunk-fishes, cow-fishes, angel-fishes, rainbow-flounders, etc.; also large specimens of Octopus.

VERRILL, Addison Emory. Note on the Nomenclature of Bermuda Birds. 4th series, vol. 12; Poole vol. 162 (no. 72, December, 1901), pp. 470-471.

NOTE.— The writer refers to the articles of A. H. Verrill, in this volume, and of Outram Bangs and Thomas S. Bradlee in The Auk, for July 1901, in which several of the well-known birds of the Bermudas are given as new species or sub-species, peculiar to Bermuda. Of the differences shown by these writers, he says: "To me it seems quite useless to regard these slight differentiated forms as distinct 'species.' The differences noted in the Ground Dove, Catbird, and Vireo, are trivial and scarcely sufficient to constitute varieties. To consider them as 'sub-species' is certainly a sufficient strain on the much-stretched meaning of the term 'sub-species.' I should at most call these mere local varieties, scarcely differentiated."— p. 470.

WHITFIELD, Robert Parr. Notice of a New Sponge from Bermuda and of Some Other Forms from the Bahamas. Vol. 14 (nos. 1, 2, January and February, 1901), pp. 47-50. 4 plates.

NOTE,— Among a large number of sponges obtained at Bermuda the one here described and illustrated (in three of the four plates which accompany this article), and which is related to the monactinal tube sponge, Siphonochalina papyracea Schum., as labeled by Prof. A. E. Verrill in the Museum collection, so differs from the many specimens of that species examined that the writer determines it as a new species to which he gives the name Siphonochalina stolonifera. The writer notes another species from the same locality, as follows: "A dark purple form representing the common features of Hircinia acuta was also obtained at Bird Key, east of Nassau, N. P., and a similar form, but soft and flexible, was collected in Harrington Sound, Bermuda, in March, 1895."— p. 49.

BOWDITCH, Harold. A List of Bermudian Birds seen during July and August, 1903. Vol. 38 (nos. 451-452, July-August, 1904), pp. 555-563.

NOTE.— The writer's observations cover the interval between July 6 and August 22, 1903, during which time 21 species fell under his own eye. He also records 4 species seen by others during this period. Of those seen by himself he is only able to positively identify 14 species.

His gives more than a passing description to Phaeton americanus Grant; Corvus americanus Aud.; Progne subis (?) Linn.; Vireo noveboracensis bermudianus Bangs and Bradlee; and Sialis sialis Linn.

NOTE.— The writer gives the range, description, nest and eggs, and habits of the bird.

"The Yellow-billed Tropical Bird, although found throughout the West Indies and in fact a large portion of Central and South America, is in no locality so abundant as in the Bermudas. Here protected by wise and strict laws, they come annually to breed in thousands." The author gives an interesting account of his efforts to secure photographs of these birds from life.

TRISTRAM, Rev. Henry Baker. The "Cahowe" of the Bermudas. Vol. 9, 7th series (no. 54, June, 1902), pp. 447-448.

NOTE.— A letter to the editors, in which the author opposes the conclusion reached by Professor Verrill, and maintains that the cahowe "is a shearwater and was certainly not extinct a few years ago. I was resident in Bermuda for three years, and the cahowe was well known by that name to the fishermen. Before I obtained the bird I mentioned it to Sir W. Jardine ('Contrib. to Ornithology:' 1849, p. 79). I, with the late Sir J. Campbell Orde, afterwards obtained both birds and eggs near Cooper's Island; so did Col. H. M. Drummond-Hay, Lieut. Col. Wedderburn, and afterwards Capt. Trotter, of Dereham Park; and (in 1874) Capt. Reid, R. E. Neither Mr. Hurdis nor Mr. Jones ('Naturalist in Bermuda,' p. 94) ever doubted for a moment that the cahowe was Puffinus obscurus (Gm.), with which Mr. Salvin rightly identifies P. Auduboni. . . . The characteristics of the cahowe, as given by Mr. Verrill, exactly fit the shearwater, and can fit no other bird."

MORGAN, E. Delmar. Hakluyt editing: a correction. [Vol. 100] (no. 3400, December 24, 1892), p. 891.

NOTE.— This article calls attention to the then recent cataloguing of the Sloane Collection of MSS. including no. 750 which had been edited by Lefroy. Number 758, in the same collection, is in the same handwriting as no. 750, and is signed "Nath Butler," showing conclusively that Butler and not Captain John Smith was its author as thought by Lefroy. Smith was never at Bermuda, but Butler is known to have visited Virginia in 1623 and probably met Smith there. Butler was governor of the Bermudas from 1619 to 1622 and of Providence Island from 1638-41.

BANGS, Outram, and Bradlee, Thomas S. The Resident Land Birds of Bermuda. Vol. 18 (no. 3, July, 1901), pp. 249-257.

NOTE.— "Apart from a few sea birds that breed in Bermuda, there are but some ten species of birds that are resident in the islands. Three of these—the House Sparrow, the European Goldfinch, and the Bob-white—have been introduced by man. Thus the indigenous ornis of Bermuda includes but seven species of Land Birds—the Ground Dove, the Florida Gallinule, the Crow, the White-eyed Vireo, the Bluebird, the Catbird, and the Cardinal."

The following species are described: Colinus virginianus (Linn.), Quail, Bob-white; Columbigallina bermudiana Bangs and Bradlee, sp. nov.; Bermuda Ground Dove; Gallinula galeata (Licht.), Florida Gallinule; Vireo bermudianus Bangs and Bradlee, sp. nov., Bermuda White-eyed Vireo, "Chick-of-the-village," "Chick-choo-willio"; Corvus (americanus Aud. ?), Crow; Galeoscoptes bermudianus Bangs and Bradlee, sp. nov., Bermuda Catbird, "Blackbird"; Sialia sialis (Linn.), Bluebird; Carduelis carduelis (Linn.), Goldfinch; Passer domesticus (Linn.), House Sparrow; Cardinalis bermudianus Bangs and Bradlee, sp. nov., Bermuda Cardinal, "Red Bird."

NOTE.— Though concise, this is one of the best of the recent accounts on Bermuda. The author draws largely for his information of the early history of the islands on Lefroy's Memorials of Bermuda; while for its later history he has made use of Lucas's Historical Geography of the British Colonies and Ogilvy's Bermuda Past and Present.

ON THE ART OF PROLONGING LIFE.

A REFERENCE LIST

By Eugene Fairfield McPike.

The present list is only the beginning of a collection which, if extended, would certainly prove to be very large, for, irrespective of the great number of works here omitted, the literature of the subject is being augmented constantly. The study of personal hygiene is a vital one on which we may be assured science has not yet said its last word. The elixir of life appears undiscoverable and physical immortality absolutely unattainable, but rational living, the simple life, is well within our grasp. By its general observance the average rate of mortality might be considerably reduced.

". . . A well-known German physician, Dr. Ebstein, published a very careful treatise. . . . He had been struck by the fact that among those who have reached a great age, there have been several who had led an exuberant life, full of excesses, notably in the consumption of alcohol. None the less, Ebstein advised either a complete avoidance of alcoholic liquor, or at the most an extreme temperance in the use of it. He prescribed in addition the simplification of the conduct of life and the avoiding of anything that is unwholesome." See Mechnikov, Il'ia Il'ich; The Nature of man, pp.258–9.

MAGAZINE PERPLEXITIES.—No. VII.

The Magazine of Western History and National Magazine, N. Y.

The Magazine of Western History, one of the scarcest of the periodicals indexed in Poole's Index, presents some very peculiar problems to be solved. Should any one to whose attention this comes be able to throw any light on points in question, the writer would be very grateful. The variation in the steel engravings in different sets is peculiar, but I cannot explain by what method of issue the difference was made. As this magazine is to be indexed in the Portrait Index, now in preparation by the American Library Association Publishing Board, the question of plates is especially important, as there are several hundred portraits, mostly stee engravings, and no list of these can be found anywhere in the magazine.

The Magazine of Western History began publication in November, 1884, at Cleveland, and was published monthly, six numbers to a volume until vol. 17, no. 6, April, 1893. The name was changed to National Magazine with November, 1891, vol. 15, no. 1, thus remaining until the end of publication. Vol. 18 consisted of three numbers, called May-June, July-Aug., (part of the edition called August simply), Sept.-Oct., 1893. Vol. 19 consisted of Nov., no. 1, Dec.-Jan., 1893-94, nos. 2-3, Feb.-Mch., nos. 4-5, April-May, nos. 6-7 (some of the covers read May, no. 7 only), and Sept.-Oct., 1894, nos. 8-9, when the periodical died — that is, no libraries ever received any further numbers, The American News Co. never handled any more, Poole's Index indexed no more than these 19 vols., 1884-1894. Yet a rather substantial looking ghost of it was seen subsequently by me to which I refer below.

The Magazine of Western History was published from Cleveland, Ohio, until June, 1888. July, 1888, to the end, was published in New York City. From the beginning to Sept., 1885, the price was $4.00 a year, 50c. a number; from Oct., 1885, to Sept., 1886, $5.00 a year, 50c. a number; from Oct., 1886 to Oct., 1891, $4.00 a year, 35c. a number; Nov., 1891 to Oct., 1892, $4.00 a year, 50c. a number; Nov., 1892 to Oct., 1893, $4.00 a year, 35c. a number; Nov., 1893 to end $5.00 a year, 50c. a number.

After the name changed to National Magazine the Nov., 1891, issue was published by the New York History Co.; but Dec., 1891, to Nov., 1893, had the name National History Co. for imprint; this again became New York History Company with Dec.-Jan., 1893-94 and thus continued until the end.

After the first seven issues the number of plates given each month was largely increased, some copies having as many as seventeen steel engraved portraits. Beginning with November, 1888, vol. 9, no. 1, a different plan was adopted, that of issuing two, three or four editions, if I may so call them, of each month, identical in every respect except that they had a different assortment of plates. For example, I have three copies of November, 1888, one with three plates, another with ten plates, including the three and adding seven new ones, the third copy with nine plates, identical with no. 2 except that one plate is omitted. Of October, 1889, I have four copies, showing no sign of ever having been mutilated since they were wired by the publisher. No. 1 has portraits of Brice, Wilkin, Anthony and Libbey; No. 2 has Brice, Anthony and Libbey; No. 3 has Brice, Barnes, Creswell, Steinway and Powell; No. 4 has Brice, Wilkins, Anthony, Libbey and Gary.

It will be seen by this that some plan was adopted by the editors to include less plates in the month, and yet it is evident that many more plates than appeared in any one issue were really prepared and used. I am unable to see any explanation of this other than that there was an eastern and a western, and perhaps a southern edition. No library set today contains more than half the plates issued after Nov. 1888, and yet who shall say such a set is incomplete! I propose to print in a future number of the Bulletin of Bibliography a full list of these plates, not to prove any particular set defective, but to have a record available of what was really published from this magazine's office, and I hope that several libraries which originally subscribed may be enough interested to check their sets, and then we may learn if there is really an eastern and a western edition — something quite impossible to determine from second-hand sets. I have succeeded in getting letters from two of the associate editors during this period, but they say the variation was unknown to them, the publisher having made up the numbers.

In the Fall of 1897, I found in a second-hand book store in Buffalo a number of the National Magazine for March, 1896, vol. 23, no. 5, and, a few days later, visited the publisher in New York City, being referred by the janitor of 132 Nassau street to the Judge Building on Fifth avenue, whence the periodical had moved. There at an office called the "History Department" of the Arkell Publishing Co. the office boy in response to my request for information as to when the National Magazine had suspended said it was still issued, and, on my expressing my doubts of this, told me to go behind the glass partition and look at the numbers on the publisher's desk. And there I found, in a pile of some 200 back numbers, five dated later than October, 1894. The boy told me to come in later and see Mr. Williams, the publisher. I did so, and he said at once that the magazine had not been published for "about three years." I told him I had a number within a year, but he said that was impossible, it must be a Boston publication of the same name. I then asked him if he had not on his desk some of these later numbers, and he said I was welcome to look. Upon my pulling out of the pile a number for April, 1897, vol. 25, no. 6, he professed surprise and running the pages through his fingers exclaimed that it was a good number, but could not explain how it came to be published, tho' he had before told me he was sole publisher, and, owing to press of work, had killed the periodical three years before. I could get no satisfaction from him except the name of a man who might know about it, who he said was abroad and could not be reached. Mr. Williams finally gave me the man's club address, to which I wrote using a five cent stamp with "please forward" on the envelope. Needless to say the letter never came back to me, nor was it answered. Mr. Williams doubtless knows where it went and what was in it.

I now interviewed news companies and public libraries, and found that no number of the National Magazine had been for sale or had circulated after the Sept.-Oct., 1894 issue. Yet I have in my possession, purchased of Mr. Williams, the publisher, December, 1895, vol. 23, no. 2; January, 1896, vol. 23, no. 3; March, 1896, vol. 23, no. 5; May, 1896, vol. 24, no. 1, and April, 1897, vol. 25, no. 6. All apparently bona fide issues with cover and advertising pages.

I have tried to get some of the men whose portraits appear in these numbers to tell me if they were asked to pay for the privilege of having the plate inserted. None of them will admit it tho' I still think this the only possible explanation of the existence of these few issues. If six or eight men paid a good round sum for their biography and steel engraving, an edition of say fifty copies or less might profitably be issued, the numbers to be sent only to these men, and never sold or circulated.

Working on this supposition, a careful study of these recent odd numbers was made, and it was discovered that the advertisers had not paid for the insertion of the advertisements since 1894, and that the ads. used were simply the old plates—for example, the Floral Guide of one firm "for 1892 is now ready," the handle bars in the bicycle cuts were far too extended to cover the short style prevailing in the 1896–97 models.

Next I investigated the text of these numbers—for they had fine historical articles in addition to the biographies. One article was by a librarian, a friend of mine. He looked at the copy I sent him and replied that the article attributed to him was his own, but he never knew it had been published in a magazine. It was in short a chapter he had written for a historical work, but with a new title, and the first and last paragraphs omitted.

Therefore, I feel sure that these numbers I have mentioned, and, possibly one or two others like them, were privately put together for some purpose not honest, probably to get money from men who wanted their pictures in print. Furthermore they evidently are not of any value as a part of the set and ought to be so considered. They are simply ghosts of a dead periodical and form an interesting bit of magazine history.
